EXPLANATION:

In recent times, more and more nations threaten to develop and add to the global nuclear arsenal. The U.S. possesses the largest nuclear stockpile on earth, the deadly presence of which encourages other nations and clandestine organizations to acquire or produce their own arsenals. The recent positive overtures of the current administration, though laudable, will scale down the nuclear threat more effectively by setting a good example. Additionally, and critically important, the unsolved problem of no safe way or place to store nuclear waste is already taking a human and ecological toll on people in Colorado, the Navajo people of New Mexico, populations in Australia, and herdsmen in North Africa where there are plans to increase uranium mining. At present, France is buying up American nuclear power plants and offering to build even more on U.S. soil. We believe that this fragile earth, our island home, is a God-given gift entrusted to us as caretakers-of creation and one another. Neither nuclear weaponry, nor the mining of uranium, nor the use of nuclear power are reflective of our faith and role as life-affirming partners with God.
